Many people and institutions provided invaluable assistance in the research and writing of this book, which took place over many years. The archival work began in Nigeria in 2004–5, while I was still a graduate student at the University of Texas at Austin. I would like to thank the Department of History and the John L. Warfield Center for African and African-American Studies at UT for research grants that, while primarily provided to further my dissertation research on a different project, indirectly sowed the seeds for this one as well. Thanks also go to Saheed Aderinto, my host in Ibadan in those early days, as well as my good friend Demola Babalola, may he rest in peace. I am also grateful to Toyin Falola, my PhD supervisor and long-term collaborator, whose support and encouragement I have always greatly appreciated.

Research continued after my appointment as an assistant professor in the History Department at Virginia Tech. Grants from the VT College of Liberal Arts and Human Sciences supported fieldwork in Kaduna, London, and Khartoum between 2009 and 2014. Hauwa Yusuf and family graciously hosted me in Kaduna, and Olayemi Akinwumi provided important assistance with a variety of logistical issues. I am extremely grateful to Badreldin Elhag Musa for assisting me to gain access to the National Records Office and introducing me to various people and places in Khartoum. Thanks also to Justin Willis for introducing us.

The bulk of the book is based on archival research conducted in various places. I am immensely indebted to the staff at the Nigerian National Archives in Ibadan, and in particular to ‘Mr Mike’, who I hope is enjoying his well-earned retirement. Ibrahim Abdu provided similar assistance at the Nigerian National Archives’ Kaduna branch, for which I am grateful. Shu’aibu Shehu Aliyu helped me on more than one occasion to locate materials at the Arewa House archives, and also engaged me in a scintillating discussion about Nigerians in Sudan in the lobby of the Acropole Hotel in Khartoum that I will never forget. Thanks also to staff at the National Records Office, Khartoum, the Sudan Archive at the University of Durham, the India Office Archives at the British Library, and the National Archives of the United Kingdom at Kew for assistance in locating relevant materials.

Friends and colleagues have also assisted me in numerous ways for which I am grateful. Mukhtar Umar Bunza provided me with valuable materials from Sokoto state, and Jonathan Reynolds graciously dug up and shared some old personal notes that were of great help. John Legg tracked down a rare volume for me at George Mason University Special Collections, and Elisha Renne introduced me to Muhammed Musa, who assisted me to locate a photograph of Sir Alhaji Ahmadu Bello on Hajj of reproducible quality. Thanks also to Bill Ochsenwald for our conversations, and to John Slight for his reading of this manuscript and other things pilgrimage related that I have produced over the years.

Presentations of material that evolved into this book were made at the African Studies Association annual meeting in 2012 and 2013, at the National History Center’s International Seminar on Decolonization plenary conference in 2016, and at the Toyin Falola @65: African Knowledges and Alternative Futures conference at the University of Ibadan in 2018. Thanks also to Christian Jennings for inviting me to speak about the Nigerian Hajj at Washington & Lee University in 2012.

I owe thanks to all the individuals and institutions that provided me with the images in the book. Thanks to Arewa House, Jaafar Jaafar of the Daily Nigerian newspaper, and Francis Gotto at Durham University Libraries for providing images. Thanks also to Ethan T. Nash and Toyin Falola for creating the maps in this volume. I would also like to express my appreciation to Emma Brennan, Meredith Carroll, and the Studies in Imperialism series editors at Manchester University Press for their care and attention shepherding this book through publication.

Finally, I must thank family and friends who have helped see me through the long process of completing this project. You are too many to name, but you know who you are. To my wife and best friend, Ann, thanks for your love, support, and patience. I could not do much of anything without it. I know there are others whom I am failing to mention, and I will regret it when I remember them after it is too late to recognise them here. Please forgive this indiscretion, and know that I appreciate you all.
