Notes on contributors

Jonathan Bignell is Professor of Television and Film at the University of Reading. He is a General Editor (with Sarah Cardwell and Lucy Fife Donaldson) of Manchester University Press’s ‘The Television Series’, which he co-founded with Cardwell, and co-editor of the ‘Moments in Television’ collections. Jonathan’s writing often combines historiographic work with analysis of the audiovisual forms and style of TV programmes and films. His writing includes contributions to the journals Adaptation, Critical Studies in Television, Historical Journal of Film, Radio & Television, Media History and Screen.

Sarah Cardwell is Honorary Fellow in the School of Arts at the University of Kent. She is a General Editor (with Jonathan Bignell and Lucy Fife Donaldson) of Manchester University Press’s ‘The Television Series’, which she co-founded with Bignell, and co-editor of the ‘Moments in Television’ collections. Sarah’s research within television aesthetics and adaptation studies is characteristically inspired by analytic philosophical aesthetics. She is the author of Adaptation revisited (2002) and Andrew Davies (2005) (both Manchester University Press), as well as numerous articles and papers on literary adaptation, contemporary British literature and television aesthetics, and she is an Editorial Advisor to Critical Studies in Television.

Alex Clayton is Associate Professor in Film and Television at the University of Bristol. He has written widely on film and television style, performance, comedy and criticism. His books include The body in Hollywood slapstick (McFarland, 2007) and Funny how: sketch comedy and the art of humor (SUNY, 2020).

Louise Coopey is a PhD researcher in film and television at the University of Birmingham. Her research focuses on the visual representation of the twenty-first-century Other in complex television, exploring how identity manifests within character development arcs through the lens of HBO’s Game of Thrones (2011–19). Louise’s chapter entitled ‘Where the streets have no shame: Queen Cersei Lannister’s quest for alternative patriarchy’ is published in the edited collection Antiheroines of contemporary literary media, television and cinema (2020). She has also written a chapter for Amsterdam University Press’s forthcoming collection, Epistolary entanglements in film, media and the visual arts.

Liam Creighton is a doctoral researcher in the School of Arts at the University of Kent, and his research focuses on space and place in British film. He teaches film studies and film production at New York University London and Ravensbourne University. He previously received an MA in Filmmaking from the London Film School and has directed and produced for a variety of media, including feature documentaries, short films, music videos and video games.

Lucy Fife Donaldson is Senior Lecturer in Film Studies at the University of St Andrews. She is a General Editor (with founding editors Sarah Cardwell and Jonathan Bignell) of Manchester University Press’s ‘The Television Series’ and co-editor of the ‘Moments in Television’ collection. Lucy’s research focuses on the materiality of style and the body in popular film and television. She is the author of Texture in film (Palgrave, 2014), co-editor of Television performance (Red Globe Press, 2019) and a member of the editorial boards of Movie: A Journal of Film Criticism and MAI: Feminism and Visual Culture.

Courtney Hopf is Lecturer and Programme Manager for Liberal Studies and Creative Arts at New York University London. Her research focuses on narrative theory and contemporary literature and film. She has published articles on serial internet narratives, social media and memory, and the novels Cloud Atlas and Black Swan Green by the author David Mitchell. She is the co-editor of David Mitchell: contemporary critical perspectives (with Wendy Knepper, Bloomsbury Academic, 2019).

Sarah Moore is Senior Lecturer in the Department of Social and Policy Sciences at the University of Bath. A criminologist and sociologist by training, she is the author of Crime and the media (Palgrave Macmillan, 2014) and Detecting the social: order and disorder in post-1970s detective fiction (Palgrave Macmillan, 2018), which was awarded the 2019 International Crime Fiction Association Prize for scholarly contribution to the field.

Zoë Shacklock is a Lecturer in Film Studies at the University of St Andrews. Her research focuses on the body in contemporary television, with particular interests in movement, queerness and empathy. Her monograph Television and the moving body is under contract with Edinburgh University Press.

James C. Taylor is a teaching fellow at the University of Warwick’s Department of Film and Television Studies. His forthcoming book, The superhero blockbuster: adaptation, style, and meaning, is under contract with the University Press of Mississippi.

Timotheus Vermeulen is Professor of media, culture and society at the University of Oslo, Norway. He is co-founder of the now defunct webzine Notes on metamodernism and a regular contributor to frieze. He has published extensively in the disciplines of ‘screen studies’ and ‘critical and cultural theory’, but he also frequently writes and talks about art. He is currently preparing a manuscript entitled Gestures of time: screen performance as temporal form for SUNY.

James Walters is Reader in Film and Television Studies at the University of Birmingham. His books include Alternative worlds in Hollywood cinema (Intellect, 2008), Fantasy film (Bloomsbury, 2011), the BFI TV Classic on The Thick of It (2016), Film moments (Palgrave Macmillan, 2010) (with Tom Brown) and Television performance (Red Globe Press, 2019) (with Lucy Fife Donaldson).

Phil Wickham is the Curator of The Bill Douglas Cinema Museum at the University of Exeter and was formerly a TV Curator at the BFI. He writes and teaches extensively on British film and television and has published Understanding television texts (BFI, 2007), The Likely Lads in the BFI TV Classics series (Palgrave Macmillan, 2008) and chapters in Social class and television drama in contemporary Britain (eds Forrest and Johnson, Palgrave Macmillan, 2017) and British art cinema (eds Newland and Hoyle, Manchester University Press, 2019). He is co-editor of the forthcoming Bill Douglas: a film artist (University of Exeter Press, 2022) (with Amelia Watts).
