Acknowledgements

Many people – practitioners and scholars – have helped us during the writing of this book, answering enquiries and talking to us about their work. We cannot mention them all but we are extremely grateful to them for their willingness to share their expertise. In particular we would like to thank Chris Ballinger, Emily Commander, Christopher Johnson, Oonagh Gay, Robert Hazell, Robert Kaye, Sir Christopher Kelly, Brendan Keith, Sir Philip Mawer, Andrew McDonald, Maggie O’Boyle, Mark Philp, John Uhr, Hannah White and Brian Walker. We are also grateful for the comments of various anonymous reviewers.

A number of research assistants have given invaluable help. We especially thank Somer Omar and Sam Rowan. The Australian National University gave Gillian Peele a much appreciated opportunity to discuss some of these ideas with colleagues in Canberra. We are grateful also to the Department of Politics and International Relations at the University of Oxford which provided help in many ways including additional research support. David Hine is grateful to the Economic and Social Research Council’s Future Governance programme: Lessons in Public Policy (grant no: L216252003), and to the Fell Fund of the University of Oxford, for financial support for parts of the research in this book, and to Christ Church, Oxford for research leave. We also gratefully acknowledge the permission to cite material used in the tables, boxes and figures from the Hansard Society and the Committee on Standards in Public Life.

Any errors are of course our own.
