NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Jannika Brostrom is Associate Lecturer and PhD candidate in the Politics and International Relations Program at the University of Tasmania. She is currently writing her dissertation on the notion of morality in Australian foreign policy. Her research interests include international relations theory, approaches to aid and development, Australian foreign and security policy and political theory. She has published on the topics of moral realism, aid and development and cooperative security in Australia's foreign policy.

Gavin Daly is Senior Lecturer in Modern European History at the University of Tasmania, Australia. He has published widely on both Britain and France during the French Revolutionary-Napoleonic Wars. His most recent book is The British Soldier in the Peninsular War: Encounters with Spain and Portugal, 1808–1814 (Palgrave Macmillan, 2013).

Graeme P. Herd is Professor of Transnational Security Studies at George C. Marshall European Center for Security Studies. He was previously Director of the School of Government, Plymouth University, and prior to this was Senior Programme Advisor and Senior Fellow, Leadership in Conflict Management Programme at the Geneva Center for Security Policy. His research focuses on diverse aspects of Russian foreign and security policy and Great Power relations. He is the co-editor (with John Kriendler) of Understanding NATO in the 21st Century: Alliance Strategies, Security and Global Governance (Routledge, 2013) and co-author (with Nayef Al-Rodhan and Lisa Watanabe) of Critical Turning Points in the Middle East, 1915–2015 (Palgrave Macmillan, 2011).

Matt Killingsworth is Lecturer in International Relations at the University of Tasmania. His current research is concerned with the relationship between the laws of war and international order. He is the author of Civil Society in Communist Eastern Europe: Opposition and Dissent in Totalitarian Regimes (ECPR Press, 2012) and has published book chapters and journal articles on opposition and dissent in Communist Eastern Europe, justice in post-Communist Eastern Europe, the changing nature of war and the laws of war. In 2013 he was a Visiting Fellow at the University of Oxford's Institute for Ethics, Law and Armed Conflict.

Terry Narramore is Lecturer in International Relations at the University of Tasmania, where he specialises in the domestic and international politics of China. His research interests include China's security strategy, Sino-Japanese relations, and the domestic challenges to China's authoritarian state, particularly minority resistance.

Jan Pakulski is Professor Emeritus at the University of Tasmania, Fellow of the Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia, Affiliate of the Stanford Centre for Poverty and Inequality, and Visiting Professor at Collegium Civitas, Warsaw. He is the (co-)author of 10 books and over 120 scholarly articles on elites, democratisation, multiculturalism, post-communism, social movements and social inequality. His most recent books include Toward Leader Democracy (with Andras Korosenyi) (Anthem, 2012) and Declining Political Leadership in Australia (with Bruce Tranter) (Palgrave, 2015).

Matthew Sussex is Head of Politics and International Relations at the School of Social Sciences, University of Tasmania. His research interests include strategic and security studies, Russian politics and foreign policy, and conflict in the international system. He has been awarded grants from bodies such as the Australian Research Council and the Fulbright Commission, amongst others. His recent books include Conflict in the Former USSR (Cambridge University Press, 2012). His numerous articles and book chapters focus on Russian foreign and security policy, the foreign policies of great powers, globalisation and contemporary war, and Australian security policy. He is a National Executive member of the Australian Institute of International Affairs and a founding member of the Australian Council for Strategic Studies.

Jasmine-Kim Westendorf is Lecturer in International Relations at La Trobe University. Her research interests lie in conflict and peace studies, negotiated peace settlements and peacebuilding, and the politics of international law. She has published her research in leading journals including the Australian Journal of International Affairs, and has conducted policy work for numerous development NGOs. She is the author of Why Peace Processes Fail: Negotiating Insecurity After Civil Wars (Lynne Rienner Publishers, 2015).