Notes on the authors and contributors

Tom Clark writes editorials for the Guardian. Previously, he worked as a special adviser to the British government and an economist at the Institute for Fiscal Studies where he specialised in poverty and welfare.

Robert D. Putnam is Malkin Professor of Public Policy at Harvard University. He established a best-selling audience through his previous books, is active in the media, and engaged with politicians, including American presidents and British prime ministers. The Economist hailed his Making Democracy Work (1993) as ‘a great work of social science, worthy to rank alongside de Tocqueville, Pareto and Weber’. Prospect magazine ranked him among the world’s top 100 intellectuals in 2009, and his outstanding contribution to scholarship in political science was recognised with the Skytte Prize in 2006.

Edward Fieldhouse is Professor of Social and Political Science at the University of Manchester where he is Director of the Institute for Social Change. He has published on a wide range of issues, including political engagement and participation, voter turnout and voting behaviour, with a particular focus on the interaction between individuals and the local context. He is author of a recent book Neither Left nor Right? The Liberal Democrats and the Electorate (2005) with Andrew Russell.

David Cutts is a Research Fellow at the Institute for Social Change, University of Manchester. His research has focused on geographical and contextual effects in voting and attitudes, voter turnout, political engagement and participation and social networks.

Robert Ford is a Post-doctoral Fellow in the Cathie Marsh Centre for Census and Survey Research, University of Manchester. His research has concerned British attitudes towards immigrants and ethnic minorities.

Dan Hopkins is a Post-doctoral Fellow and Lecturer in the Department of Government, Harvard University. He has undertaken research on ethnic and racial diversity, political behaviour, local and urban politics and attitudes on poverty.

Yaojun Li is Professor of Sociology at the Institute for Social Change, University of Manchester. His main interests are in social mobility, social capital and ethnic differences. He has published many papers in top sociology journals, book chapters and research reports for government agencies.

Ceri Peach is part-time Professor in the Institute for Social Change, University of Manchester. Between 1992 and 2007 he was Professor of Social Geography at Oxford. He has held fellowships and visiting professorships at the Australian National University, Yale, Berkeley, UBC Harvard and Princeton. His major research interest is the segregation of ethnic and religious minorities. He has advised the British government on minority segregation, faith communities and Census questions. He was the American Association of Geographers Distinguished Ethnic Geographer of the year in 2008.

Mary C. Waters is M. E. Zukerman Professor of Sociology at Harvard University. Her research interests have included immigration and inter-group relations. Recent books are Inheriting the City: The Second Generation Comes of Age (2008) with Jennifer Holdaway, Philip Kasinitz and John Mollenkopf; and The New Americans: A Guide to Immigration Since 1965 (2007) with Reed Ueda and Helen Marrow.