Acknowledgements

Kevin Hickson would like to record his thanks to the late Lord Biffen, Lord Howe, John Redwood MP, Professor Roger Scruton, Jonathan Sumption QC, Lord Tebbit, David Willetts MP, and Sir Peregrine Worsthorne. All kindly agreed to be interviewed for the book. John Redwood, Roger Scruton, Jonathan Sumption, David Willetts and Sir Peregrine Worsthorne also commented on the relevant draft chapters. We are most grateful for their assistance, although we accept full responsibility for the judgements included in the published version. Kevin Hickson would also like to thank Professor Lee Miles and Professor Arthur Aughey.

Mark Garnett's greatest debts are to five Conservatives who, in the course of research for earlier projects, offered valuable insights which were relevant to this book. Lord Alport, James Douglas, Lord Gilmour, Sir Edward Heath and Lord Pym are no longer alive, but they are remembered with great affection and gratitude. The chapters on Macmillan, Butler, Hailsham and Maude are dedicated to Ian Gilmour, in memory of a long and cherished friendship. Although he died before the completion of the chapter on his own career, he agreed to be interviewed for the project and, as ever, was a generous host on that occasion. He would have dissented very strongly from the conclusions of the chapter which discusses the nature of his own ideas, but hopefully he would have recognised their friendly intentions.
