Preface and acknowledgements

Writing this book between the 60th and the 61st anniversaries of the Nakba and the State of Israel, in the year of the Gaza war, the bloodiest of Israel's bloody wars, has been both traumatic and liberating. In particular, the book is the result of a series of dialogues conducted with a group of people without whom it could not have been written. As always, my conversations with my soul sister Nitza Aminov have sustained me intellectually, politically and emotionally.

Nitza Aminov and Tamar Avraham have given me useful interviews quoted throughout the book, and both of them and David Landy read chapter drafts and their comments and suggestions were invaluable. David Landy and Anaheed Al- Hardan acted as my research assistants and their work informs parts of this book. Eli Aminov was inspirational, and as always made sure I got the latest books relevant to my research.

Other people who assisted me in the birth of this book, directly and indirectly, include Nahla Abdo, Ronit Chacham, Honaida Ghanim, David Theo Goldberg, Smadar Lavie, Yosefa Loshitzky, Ilan Pappé, Nadera Shalhoub Kevorkian, Ahmad Sa'di, Yehouda Shenhav, Oren Yiftachel, Michal Zak, Raef Zreik and Elia Zureik. I am grateful to Wakim Wakim of ADRID and Salman Natour of the Emile Touma Centre for agreeing to talk to me, and to the organisers of Mada Al Carmel's Nakba conference in 2008 for inviting me to present a preliminary paper. The work of Zochrot opened up the conversation about the Nakba in Hebrew – speaking to members, following the group's activities and reading its publication was invaluable. Thanks to Louis who lovingly pulled me out of my Gaza abyss.

The translations of the Hebrew works I cite are mine, unless published translations exist.

I dedicate the book to Alana Lentin and Partho Sen-Gupta and their daughter Noam, and Miki Lentin and Miriam Levin and their daughter Arielle.