Acknowledgements

I am grateful to the Irish Research Council for the Humanities and Social Sciences for awarding me a Government of Ireland Scholarship to carry out the first three years of my research, and to the staff of Manchester University Press for its publication.

I also wish to express gratitude to those within the Irish security community who agreed to be interviewed and to a number of others, who, although they were not formally interviewed, continuously supplied me with information and insights. I will not disclose their identities.

Ben Tonra's academic leadership ensured that a Ph.D. thesis proposal brim-full of disparate ideas and rough arguments developed into what is presented here. He showed immense patience and he criticised thoughtfully, supportively and with great humour. In addition Eunan O'Halpin, Andreas Dür and Tobias Theiler provided very helpful criticisms at the end. En route Nicholas Rees was ever ready to listen and advise.

Without Niall Ó Ciosáin's encouragement in late 2001 I would not have undertaken further study. When I did I was fortunate to have Eibhir Mulqueen for stimulating discussion, reassurance and a sharp copy-editor's eye. Camilla Fanning was indefatigable as a valuable source of assistance, support and ideas once our paths crossed at the Dublin European Institute, University College, Dublin. Lorcan Roche Kelly arrived later but in time to challenge the haze of my thinking in warm conversation and lively debate. Conor and Jack Kavanagh were ever ready to provide me with their insightful observations on matters of journalism and diplomacy; this is to say nothing of the unfailing kindness and generosity which the entire Kavanagh family have extended to me for many years. Branka Parlić was a constant companion in the long nights of writing; I am grateful both for her patient guidance through the repertoire of contemporary music and for our discussions on the governance and politics of Serbia, into which one day I hope to conduct further research.

My various editors at The Clare People and Jane's Information Group were always flexible in the face of my numerous research distractions. The Hawes family of Brickhill, Cratloe, Co. Clare never once refused the many requests I made for their practical help. Without them, quite honestly, I would never have finished this book. When, eventually, I did Liz Dore (née Hawes) of the Regional Medical Library, Limerick, agreed to compile the index. I am indebted to her for her patience, diligence and skill. Over a longer time span my parents, Mike Mulqueen and Regina Mulqueen, and my brother Billy and sister Elizabeth helped shape things such that I happily embraced academic pursuits. I wish, in addition, to express gratitude for the friendship of Mai Blaney, Mike Lavery, Bessy Murphy and her family and all at Flan's, Pat O' Brien, John J. O'Connor, Tony Rodgers and Michael Small.

Finally I wish to thank colleagues and students, past and present, at the Department of Languages and Cultural Studies at the University of Limerick, the School of Politics and International Relations at University College, Dublin, the Department of Government at University College Cork and in Journalism at NUI Galway for their support, inspiration and good humour.

For the shortcomings herein only I bear responsibility.

Michael Mulqueen
University of Limerick