Acknowledgements

As this project has evolved from Bachelor's dissertation to PhD thesis to published monograph I have become indebted to a great many individuals and institutions whose support was vital to successfully overcoming the many challenges and obstacles this research has faced. PhD-funding was a particularly difficult challenge, and I can thank my grandmother, Janet Ziegler, and my father, Jeffrey Smitley, for underwriting my first two years of post-graduate study, while my successful application for a PEO loan for the final year's fees owes much to the help of Mary Ellen Rickert and Laurie Beall. Thanks are also due to my mother, Linda Ziegler, for her financial and moral support and to Daniel Soule, who sustained my student lifestyle by hiring me as his tutor. I must also thank the University of Glasgow's Economic and Social History Department for providing me with much needed office-space and interesting company during my PhD candidacy. I am further grateful to the Economic and Social Research Council for awarding me a post-doctoral fellowship, an appointment which allowed me to re-write substantially and re-imagine my doctoral research as a monograph study.

This study would not have been possible without the care and diligence of the archivists and librarians who cared for the materials I relied on, and I am especially grateful for the efforts of: the Ayrshire Archives, the British Library, the Glasgow City Archives, the Glasgow University Archives and Special Collections, the Library of the Society of Friends, the Mitchell Library, the National Library of Scotland and the Women's Library. A special thanks to Denise Brace and the Edinburgh City Museum for granting access to their outstanding collection of BWTASCU material.

This book has been a long time in the making, and over the years I have benefited from the kindness and patience of friends and colleagues. Thanks are due to Luc Russell whose proof reading and forbearance through ups and downs has been vital to bringing this project to a happy conclusion. I am particularly grateful for the insight and encouragement of teachers and mentors: Marc Baer for first inspiring my interest in middle-classness and industrialisation; Lynn Abrams and Eleanor Gordon whose invaluable guidance and critique nurtured my initial analysis of middle-class women's public lives; and Clare Midgley whose friendship and mentoring helped me to re-evaluate and strengthen my discussion. A final thanks to the staff at Manchester University Press for bringing this book to fruition.
