Acknowledgements

This research was made possible by the support and collaboration of the leaders, members, and supporters of the various Chagossian organisations in Mauritius and the UK, many of whom have assisted my research in numerous ways. Among them, my special thanks go to the Chagos Refugees Group, especially Olivier Bancoult and Lisette Talate; the Chagossian Social Committee, especially Fernand Mandarin and Hervé Lassemillante; the Diego Garcia Island Council and Diego Garcian Society, especially Allen Vincatassin and Christian Ramdas; and the Chagos Island Community Association, especially Hengride Permal.

I am extremely grateful for the generous hospitality of the many people who welcomed me into their homes and families in Mauritius and Crawley. Among them, my warmest gratitude goes to Elena and Hervé Rabouine; Jenny and Joseph Bertrand; Marie-Josée Clément, Pamela Clément, and their family; Claudinette and Wessley Jules and their families; Mylene and Michel Leveque; Rita Elysée and Mimose and Cyril Furcy; Anne-Marie Alphonse, Rosemay Spéville, and Jean-Noel Louis; Charlesia Alexis; Maudea and Rosemond Saminaden, and Claudie Anselme; Louis-René France, Jean-Aurel France, and their families; Dick Kwan Tat and Sarochin Khunwongsa; Lindsey Collen, Ram Seegobin, and Ragini Kistnasawmy; and Dominique Pascal and family.

My family has supported me in numerous ways throughout this period of research and writing. My partner Andrew Clements accompanied me for the first year in Mauritius, and his presence and assistance greatly enriched my experience of fieldwork (as I discovered when I later conducted fieldwork alone). My parents Patricia and Roger Jeffery have engaged tirelessly with all stages of my work, from research proposal to final manuscript. I am further indebted to my parents and my parents-in-law Susan and Paul Clements for looking after their grandson Kenneth so that I could prepare the final transcript during my maternity leave.

The processes of thinking through and writing up my doctoral and post-doctoral research have also benefited from the support and input of numerous anthropologist friends and colleagues in Cambridge, Edinburgh, St Andrews, and beyond, especially my doctoral supervisor James Laidlaw; my PhD examiners Dan Rabinowitz and Harri Englund; inspiring teachers at Cambridge, particularly Yael Navaro-Yashin, Marilyn Strathern, Stephen Hugh-Jones, and Susan Bayly; my Cambridge housemates Joanna Cook, Gwyn Williams, and Matei Candea; my postdoctoral mentor Tony Good and other Edinburgh colleagues Toby Kelly and Richard Whitecross; my St Andrews mentor Nigel Rapport, and Hideko Mitsui; and fellow researchers who have worked with the Chagossian community, particularly David Vine and Iain Walker. I am also grateful to the New Ethnographies series editor Alex Smith for his unwavering confidence in this project, to Manchester University Press for its efficient peer review and publication process, and to three anonymous reviewers for their constructive criticism and insightful comments on my manuscript. None of the above bears responsibility for my neglect to incorporate some of their suggestions more fully.

My doctoral research amongst displaced Chagos islanders in Mauritius was supported by an ESRC Postgraduate Training Award (R42200134267) at the University of Cambridge (2001–5). My postdoctoral research amongst Chagossian migrants in the UK was supported by a Leverhulme Early Career Fellowship (ECF/2006/0122) at the University of Edinburgh (2006–8). Preparation of this manuscript was supported by a writing fellowship at the University of St Andrews (2008–9).

Parts I and II of this book are based on my doctoral research amongst displaced Chagos islanders in Mauritius (see Jeffery 2006a). Some aspects of the first two chapters are shared with book chapters I co-authored with David Vine (Vine & Jeffery 2009; Jeffery & Vine 2011), parts of Chapter 2 speak to my article in History and Anthropology (Jeffery 2006b), and Chapter 3 is based on my article in the Journal of the Royal Anthropological Institute (Jeffery 2007). The chapters in Part III are based on my postdoctoral research amongst migrant Chagossians in the UK, resonating with arguments explored in my article in the Journal of Ethnic and Migration Studies (Jeffery 2010). The first half of the Postscript is based on my comment published in Anthropology Today (Jeffery 2009).