ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In writing Imperial spaces the authors have incurred numerous debts to colleagues and institutions in both the Northern and Southern hemispheres. Our primary debt is to the Leverhulme Trust in London, who between 2001 and 2004 generously funded the original research project ('Memory, place, and symbol: Irish identities and landscape in colonial Australia') on which this book is based. In Australia, we are indebted to the staff of the following institutions for their unfailingly courteous and helpful response to our frequently arcane enquiries: the National Library of Australia, Canberra; the Mitchell Library, Sydney; the State Library of Victoria, Melbourne; the New South Wales State Archives; and the Royal Historical Society of Victoria. We happily acknowledge the permission granted by these institutions to quote from archives held in their care.

The School of Historical Studies at the University of Melbourne provided a congenial base for much of the time spent researching this book, not least during the sabbatical year Lindsay Proudfoot spent as an Honorary Visiting Fellow there in 2004–5. We are grateful to Professor Elizabeth Malcolm, Gerry Higgins Professor of Irish Studies at the University, for facilitating this. Without her encouragement, friendship and support the project would have been much more difficult to complete. Also in the School of History, Professor Joy Damousi, Professor Patricia Grimshaw, Professor Stuart McIntyre, the late Associate Professor David Philips, Professor Charles Sowerwine as well as Dr Dolly McKinnon, Dr Pamela O'Neill, Dr Kier Reeves, Dr Peter Sherlock and Dr Clare Wright all contributed at various times to the intellectually stimulating and collegiate environment in which we worked. The quiet efficiency of the School's management team, especially Erica Mehrtens, ensured that things ran as smoothly as possible.

We have benefited from discussions with an active and engaged community of scholars of Irish studies in various parts of Australia and New Zealand, including the late Professor Patrick O'Farrell in Sydney; Dr Philip Bull, Associate Professor Frances Devlin-Glass, Mary Doyle, Dr Liz Rushen and Dr Val Noone in Melbourne; Dr Jennifer Harrison in Brisbane; and Dr Gordon Forth in Warrnambool. In Melbourne, Professor Joe Powell and his wife, Suzie, command our especial thanks for their unstinting hospitality to the Proudfoot family during their visits to Australia, and for Joe's insights into Australian geography. In New Zealand, Dr Brad Patterson, Professor Michael Roche, Dr Lyndon

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Fraser, Professor Peter Kuch and Professor Malcolm Campbell have all provided useful correctives to the hegemonic Australian view of the Antipodean Irish. Lindsay Proudfoot owes Brad and Kathryn Patterson and Mike Roche particular thanks for their generous hospitality in Wellington and Palmerston North respectively.

Elsewhere, we wish to thank Dorothy King, Wendy Melbourne and all at the Stawell Historical Society; all the dedicated volunteers at the Kilmore District Hospital and Kilmore Historical Society, particularly Heather Knight; Rachel Naughton of the Melbourne Diocesan Historical Commission; Mrs Chris Palmer, Church Records Manager, Presbyterian Church of Victoria; Fr Peter Rankin, Parish Priest, St Patrick's Catholic Church, Kilmore and Ray Thorburn of the Kiama Family History Centre.

Successive Irish Australian (subsequently Irish Australasian) Studies conferences in Melbourne and Wellington in 2004, 2007 and 2009, the AHRC Nations and Diasporas conferences in Aberdeen and Wellington in 2008 and meetings of the Melbourne Irish Studies Seminar between 2002 and 2008 provided congenial forums for frequently challenging debates which have helped to shape this book. We are grateful to all those – alas now anonymous – contributors who took part. An earlier version of a small portion of the material in Chapter 6 appeared as 'Imagining the Frontier: Environment, Memory and Settlement: Narratives from Victoria, Australia, 1850–1890', in the Journal of Irish and Scottish Studies (3, 2010).

In Ireland, the early formulation of the research owed much to the constructive advice and criticism of Professor David Fitzpatrick, whose own work on Irish emigration to Australia has been of foundational importance to it. In Belfast, we greatly benefited from the professionalism of the staff at the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland. Much of the book was written while Lindsay Proudfoot was Reader in Irish Historical Geography at Queen's University, Belfast. We acknowledge the interest shown in the project by his colleagues there, particularly Professor Bruce Campbell, who was unstinting in his support. We owe particular thanks to Maura Pringle, Senior Cartographer in the School of Geography, Archaeology, and Palaeoecology at Queen's for her professionalism in turning our scrappy drawings into the polished figures that appear here.

Our final debts are more personal. To Jennifer, Gillian and Robin in Belfast; and Louise, Rowan and Jack in Melbourne, our greatest debt is due.

Belfast and Melbourne