Acknowledgements

This work would not have been possible without financial support from the Arts and Humanities Research Council during my PhD studies, and then the Irish Research Council for the Humanities and Social Sciences and Queen's University Belfast's International Research Initiative, both of which funded post-doctoral positions. Special thanks are due to Richard English and Margaret O'Callaghan, who have been unstinting in their support over many years. I am very grateful to both of them. Similarly, I am indebted to Jennifer Todd and John Coakley, who offered excellent guidance during my time at University College Dublin. Many others provided advice or useful commentary on the work at various stages. In particular, I would like to thank Paula Douglas, Lorenzo Bosi, Christopher Farrington, Mark McNally, Catherine O'Donnell and Tony Wilson. In addition, I am grateful to those who agreed to be interviewed for the book – John Hume himself, but also Gerry Adams, Ben Caraher, Ivan Cooper, Mark Durkan, Seán Farren, Garret FitzGerald, Denis Haughey, Alban Maginness, Eddie McGrady and Mitchel McLaughlin.

Thanks are also due to the staff at Manchester University Press, who have been wonderful in their professionalism and their patience. Similarly, I extend my appreciation to the staff of various libraries and archives: the James Joyce Library at University College Dublin; the Main Library and Séamus Heaney Library at Queen's University Belfast; Belfast's Linen Hall Library, and in particular its Northern Ireland Political Collection; the Belfast Newspaper Library; the Public Records Office of Northern Ireland; and the National Archives of Ireland.

Finally, I am grateful to loved ones who tolerated my preoccupation with this work for extended periods. In particular, I thank Paula, who undoubtedly suffered the most in this regard.

Chapters 1 and 2 of this book draw on an article entitled “...it's a united Ireland or nothing”? John Hume and the idea of Irish unity, 1964–72’, published by Taylor and Francis in Irish Political Studies, 21:2 (2006), pp. 157–80. Chapter 3 builds on an article entitled “Dublin is just a Sunningdale away”? The SDLP and the failure of Northern Ireland's Sunningdale experiment’, published by Oxford University Press in Twentieth Century British History, 19:4 (2008), pp. 74–96. Elements of Chapters 5 and 11 draw on an article entitled ‘The SDLP and the Europeanization of the Northern Ireland problem’, due for publication by Taylor and Francis in Irish Political Studies, 24:4 (2009). Part of the Conclusions section borrows from an article entitled ‘Horowitz’s theory of ethnic party competition and the case of the SDLP, 1970–79’, published by Taylor and Francis in Nationalism and Ethnic Politics, 14:4 (2008), pp. 549–78.

P. J. McLoughlin,
Belfast, August 2009