It is difficult to express and impossible to quantify the degree of support I have been given in completing this book. The funding and support of Trinity College and the Trinity Immigration Initiative, and the additional support and opportunities afforded by the School of Social Work and Social Policy and its heads – first Prof. Robbie Gilligan and then Dr. Eoin O’Sullivan – have been far-reaching and are much appreciated. For the other hats of supervisor, mentor and supporter that he has worn in this process, I owe Eoin further debts of sincere gratitude. For their enthusiasm, support and invaluable feedback as my PhD examiners, I sincerely thank Prof. Ivana Bacik and Prof. Donncha O’Connell. Thanks for further financial support go to Westmeath County Council and to the Polish Embassy for providing a wonderful scholarship to study in Warsaw. Many, many people facilitated and took part (often unknowingly) in the research process that has led to this book, and I would like to express my appreciation of the help and support provided by the Irish Courts Service, the President of the District Court and the President’s Office, the registrars who took time out of their busy day to help me, and the judges, court staff, court participants and all of the research participants who gave so generously of their time, expertise and experience. For the support, belief and unfailing encouragement of my friends and family, I cannot thank them enough; I will not forget the calls, the coffees, the lunches and the Lemsips that somehow materialised when needed. Particular appreciation and recognition is due for the support and contributions of Niall MacGiollabhuí, Natalie Woodward and Alana Smith, and, as ever, deepest thanks to Tom Waterhouse for being both a rock and a brick. Finally, I would like to thank Manchester University Press most sincerely for their support.
